The one-line identity

QuotaSprint is a weekly focus coach for B2B sellers — it turns a messy pipeline into a short, sharp weekly sprint on the few actions that actually win deals, with tailored coaching when a rep gets stuck.

Positioning statement

For new-business sellers in complex, multi-step B2B sales who are under-coached and under pressure, QuotaSprint is a weekly sales operating system that filters for real pipeline, kills deal rot, and keeps reps accountable to the lead measures that drive the lag results. Unlike one-off training (no weekly structure), a CRM (records the past, doesn't tell you what to do next), or a stretched sales manager (inconsistent, time-poor), QuotaSprint gives every rep a personal rhythm — and gives their leader a simple cockpit to see who needs help.

The core idea: nail the leads to earn the lags

Sales performance is judged on lag metrics — monthly and quarterly numbers. But the misses happen at the lead level: the days and weeks where the right activities, on the right accounts, at the right stages, simply don't happen.

QuotaSprint borrows the agile metaphor your audience already understands:

- Weekly cycle = the sprint — 15–20 minutes to set the week
- Lead measures = sprint tasks — the controllable actions for the week
- Lag outcomes = the increment — pipeline created, deals progressed, revenue won
- End-of-week review = the retro — what moved, what slipped, what changes next week

You sprint the leads; the lags follow.

The philosophical spine: PULL, not PUSH

Whether B2B or B2C, people buy from people — heart first, then head. QuotaSprint is built to find and protect deals where the buyer is pulling, and to expose deals where the rep is pushing.

- At opportunity entry, it interrogates: What's the compelling reason to act? What's the cost of the status quo? What compelling event or dependency drives the timing — the buyer's, or the rep's?
- Each week, it scans for buyer-side pull signals: time committed, information shared, responsiveness, proactive questions, internal stakeholder movement.
- When activity goes one-sided (sales-only), it flags deal rot and redirects the rep's time to real opportunities or to fresh prospecting.
- Every win/loss updates the rep's personal, non-negotiable qualification gates — so the system gets sharper at telling real from wishful.

This is the answer to the well-worn truth that most of a CRM's pipeline isn't real from the buyer's side. QuotaSprint is about fewer, truer deals.

Who it's for (ICP)

- Primary: New-business BDM / BDR / AE / Account Manager / Sales Director in complex, multi-step B2B (not transactional), carrying larger deals — either newer to complex selling, or experienced but currently struggling (often under-coached, sometimes under performance management).
- Secondary: Sales leaders / founders with 3–20 reps who want a coaching system and visibility without drowning in PIP paperwork.

The three doors (offer stack)

Door	Who	Core promise
Solo	Individual reps (any industry, B2B or B2C)	A weekly operating system for focus, real pipeline, and what-to-do-next.
Team	Sales leaders with multiple sellers	"PIP-style structure without the paperwork." Set the company profile once; get a cockpit on real pipeline, deal rot, and lead-measure adherence per rep.
Advisory (quote on request)	Founders / execs	Fractional GTM leadership, sales & sales-leadership coaching, GTM health assessments — layered on the data the platform surfaces.

Voice and tone

Direct, practical, a little blunt — a sales leader who's been in the seat, not a vendor. Plain English over jargon. Energising, not preachy. Speaks to controllables and progress, never scolding.

Brand cues (for later design work)

- Feel: momentum, focus, calm control — a clean "operating system," not a noisy dashboard.
- Metaphor library: sprint / rhythm / cadence, pull vs push, leads → lags, signal vs noise, real vs wishful.
- Avoid: "velocity" (Salesforce HVS + agile term clash), "cadence" (Salesloft), anything echoing "SalesSprint" (two existing brands).
